

Sumner

Sumner was settled in 1853 by members of a wagon train which crossed over the Cascade Mountains through Naches Pass. In some places, the mountains were so steep it was necessary to lower the wagons over the cliffs. Lying in a fertile river valley, Sumner became an agricultural community at the junction of the Puyallup River and Stuck Creek (now known as the White River). Major crops included daffodils, rhubarb, hops, berries, vegetables and turf grass. In 1873, George Ryan came west from Wisconsin and farmed 40 acres purchased from Laura Kincaid Seaman. He raised fruit, vegetables and hops; owned a sawmill; built a big section of the business district; and helped establish a railroad depot. In 1883, the town was platted on the 160 acres owned by John Kincaid. The establishment of the Northern Pacific rail line through the Sumner area and the construction of the depot influenced the development of the community. The downtown and core residential area developed within a 15 minute walk from the depot. With 127 registered voters, and a majority vote, the town of Sumner incorporated in 1891. George Ryan was elected the first mayor. Reporting a population of 538 in 1900, Sumner has grown to about 8,400 in 1998. Agriculture remains important to the local economy, along with food manufacturing, wood products production, and warehousing and distribution.
